The company’s lead product is a topical patch to conveniently treat excessive sweating with a quick, in-office procedure. The technology is based on the principle that alkali metals, in contact with water, generate thermal energy. Two successful clinical studies demonstrated efficacy in reducing sweat and validated that the energy is reproducibly generated, highly targeted and inactivates the most active sweat glands. In these initial clinical studies, Candesant’s treatment demonstrated significant sweat reduction benefits lasting up to 2 months after a single, no down-time treatment. The company is preparing for its pivotal study in axillary sweating.
